MAY DAY 2020

May Day is celebrated internationally as the Workers' Day to acknowledge the struggles of the past that have delivered decent wages and conditions.

It is also a day to recognise how far we have to go, especially for workers in countries unlike Australia where workers are killed if they want to form unions and where conditions of employment are unsafe and lowly paid.

This year we also need to acknowledge the efforts of all workers who are contributing to getting us through the current Covid-19 crisis; many at personal costs to themselves.

It is a time for us to continue to fight for our rights in Australia, where the Liberal Government still threatens to pass laws to make it harder for workers to organise, join strong unions and win better conditions and jobs.

This year we cannot march in the street, but until we can, we still commemorate May Day 2020.
